

Hiking to Lung Fu Shan

On 27th November, 2016, we went to Lung Fu Shan. I liked a section of Pinewood Battery and Pinewood Battery the most because I have known many history about the First World War in 1941. The Pinewood Battery was constructed starting in 1901 and finished in 1905. During the Battle of Hong Kong, the Battery came under repeated air raids. It was demolished on 20th October, 2008.

After this hiking, I have learnt how to use a map. At first, I thought that using a map was very difficult, but after the teacher's instructions, I grasped the usage of the map. I needed to thank the teachers of teaching us to use the map.

I still remembered that we were line the wrong way to the public toilet. Luckily, we still could find the way to the public toilet. Although we went the wrong way, we also incidentally went to a part of Pinewood Battery, so that's why I like the Pinewood Battery the most.

When the teacher told us to go to the toilet, Kate, ^{Hayley} Hailey, etc. and I washed our shoes ^{in the gutter} outside the toilet. Magically, we saw a fish that was in the water and was trying to swim up and did not want to flow down.

Finally, we were down the hill and dismissed at the Hong Kong University MTR station.

Today, I have learnt that slowing down is important, nature is powerful and teaches you humility, the power of kindness and gratitude, hard work will usually pay off, fresh air tastes better, there are other ways to get high, animals are beautiful, water is important, we need to protect the environment, walking a few miles isn't the end of the world in fact it is just the beginning and there are many other better things in the world than playing video games and watching TV.
